A publication of this type would be impossible without the wholehearted cooperation of the State departments of education, who checked the preliminary mailing lists, and the local public school systems, who filled out the questionnaire forms. Grateful acknowledgement is hereby made to both groups. Special Education in Local Public Schools: A Directory

SPECIAL EDUCATION of exceptional children in local public school systems had its beginning about the turn of the century. It has shown a remarkable and accelerated growth over the past quarter of a century.

Perhaps the most remarkable change has been in the number of local public school systems reporting enrollments in some type of special education program. By 1958, the number of places had grown to over 3,600, were located in 48 States, and enrolled over 882,000 children and youth. This growth has been the result of the increasingly widespread public interest in the education of exceptional children, and the general acceptance of special education as an aspect of our public schools. This expansion has occurred in spite of an almost equally dramatic reduction in the total number of school districts. It may be that school district reorganization has facilitated this expansion.

Special education in their own community or a nearby school system, therefore, has now been made available to many more thousands of exceptional children in the United States over a much more widely distributed area. Nevertheless, the coverage is still far from complete. Perhaps not more than one-fourth of the children requiring special education are now receiving it.

In our highly mobile population, inquiries regarding the places where special education is available in local public school systems have multiplied manyfold. These inquiries come from personnel connected with the Armed Services, from parents wishing to find suitable schools when they move to another area, from American educators, and from educators in other countries.

While the Office of Education has for many years periodically published statistics of special education in local public school systems, the presentation of these data in the form of a directory is offered here for the first time. It is believed that this directory will help to fill a real need for a convenient and reasonably reliable guide for this very widely dispersed set of educational services.

About this directory and its uses

This listing is based on that part of the Biennial Survey of Education in the United States, by the U. S. Office of Education, which deals with statistics of special education of exceptional children and youth.[1]

All the data were derived from the original reports of local school districts in response to an Office of Education questionnaire. The mailing list was checked by each of the 48 State departments of education in 1958. Of the schools to which forms were sent, 97 percent responded. Programs were reported as of February 1958.

The listing in this directory is confined to special education programs in local public schools. It is arranged alphabetically by State and by local school system within each State. In general, it can be expected that the geographic areas covered by the schools listed may be somewhat larger than indicated by the place name alone, because many have cooperative arrangements with other school systems or accept tuition pupils.

To bring the directory down to convenient size for over 3,600 school systems has meant reducing the data for any locality to the bare minimum that was thought might be helpful to the majority of users. These data include the number of children enrolled in elementary and secondary programs, by area of exceptionality. The total enrollments for the mentally retarded are reported by upper (educable) and middle (trainable) range. Some 5,000 nursery school and kindergarten children, also reported, are not included here.

[1] The complete analysis of the statistical data will be published as Statistics of Special Education for Exceptional Children and Youth, 1957-58. (In preparation)

The possible uses of the directory are numerous. It will be possible to derive an impression of the scope and distribution of the programs nationally, and the scope and distribution of programs in any particular area of exceptionality. The material also forms a basic list on such matters as elementary and secondary programs, by area of exceptionality.

For details regarding statewide aspects of current programs write to the State department of education in each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Canal Zone, Guam, or Puerto Rico. A directory of special educational personnel in State Departments of Education is available from the U. S. Office of Education upon request.

For further details regarding any local program listed, write to the superintendent of schools of that district. Placements of individual children will necessarily be made through the local school superintendent.

When the name of the school system is different from the post office address, the post office is given also, for example, when the operating district is a county. When the name of the post office is the same as the school, the post office is omitted. In some instances, the operating district may have a number or title, especially if it is reorganized or consolidated. In others, it may be a high school district or an elementary district. The following key is provided to the abbreviations used in the listing:

Co.—County	U.—Union or unified
H.S.—High school	Cons.—Consolidated
Elem.—Elementary	Twp.—Township

[1] Reported other pupils enrolled in a special education program but did not indicate whether they were receiving instruction at the elementary or secondary level. A total of 9,177 such pupils were reported for the Nation as a whole in the following areas of exceptionality: blind, 65; partially seeing, 223; deaf, 676; hard of hearing, 243; speech impaired, 4,318; crippled, 1,073; special health problems, 169; socially and emotionally maladjusted 2,263; gifted, 147. Another 1,029 were not reported according to elementary or secondary level or according to major category of exceptionality. They have been included in the totals reported in footnote [2]. Enrollment data for mentally retarded children were not collected according to level of instruction. An additional 5,226 exceptional children were reported in nursery and kindergarten special education programs.

[2] Reported other pupils enrolled in a special education program but did not classify them separately according to area of exceptionality. A total of 11,683 such pupils were reported for the Nation as a whole in the following combined areas of exceptionality: blind and partially seeing, 119; deaf and hard of hearing, 1,993; speech impaired and hard of hearing, 4,456; crippled and special health problems, 4,686; special health problems and socially maladjusted, 22; upper and middle range mentally retarded, 407.

[3] Reported some pupils as multihandicapped. A total of 324 such children were reported for the Nation as a whole. It should be noted that school systems were requested to report each child according to his major category of exceptionality. Therefore this is not a count of the number of multihandicapped pupils enrolled in special education programs.

[4] Reported teachers but gave no data on number of pupils enrolled.

[5] Data collected from local public school systems in the 1958 survey of special education were limited to the then 48 States. Therefore these figures, recently secured for the program in the District of Columbia, are not included in any of the published findings from the study. In addition to the enrollments appearing in the table above, the following were reported: 106 children with crippling conditions or special health problems in an elementary program and 254 children receiving home or hospital instruction, 145 at the elementary level and 109 at the secondary level.
